A movie about Vancouver's most infamous juror heads off to the Berlin film festival this week.

"I'm really excited because Bruce McDonald is going, Hugh Dillon is going," says Joely Collins, who starred in director McDonald's The Love Crimes of Gillian Guess. Dillon played a fictional talk-show host who grills Guess in the surreal take-off. Says Collins: "We're going to make a show of it. Oh yeah, man."

Gillian Guess couldn't have said it better. Collins and her movie, which airs this summer on CityTV, have travelled across Canada since the fall to festivals in Toronto, Vancouver, Whistler and, finally, the just-concluded Victoria Independent Film and Video Festival.
